After each lesson, I reflect on student responses, learning and pacing, and adjust	I can see throughout, the lesson, efforts from Haaris to regularly check for understanding and draw on student voice for sustained
Design and construct visual and working models, use them in teaching, and evaluate how they support students' understanding	I have constructed and used physical models, including a ramp model to explain voltage. I am discussing further designs with Lee and aim to build a few more	As the observed lesson was a lab practical, students had a range of learning artifacts to measure and explore relationships between

Comment:

Haaris demonstrates experience in practice, with strong knowledge of his learning area (Science) and focus on keeping students engaged and involved in the learning/instruction - great. Good to see incorporation of a whakatauki to open the learning, and invitation to students to contextualise its translated meaning for themselves. Emphasis on learning aims was clear (though not visible on the whiteboard).

Detailed lesson plan provided, with a range of strategies and resources to support transfer and application of new knowledge (relationship between voltage and current).

Opportunity to refine how learning is mapped on the lesson plan, offering more explicit differentiation between teacher and student functions throughout the

  - to self-regulate,
  - to develop agency over their learning.

Please tick one of the following:

- [ ] Developing
- [x] Demonstrating

Comment:

Students are regularly engaged and respond to regular teacher questioning and invitations to participate - great.

Haaris operates around the room as an experienced teacher and the students respond well to him. Learning resources draw on a range of knowledge processes and work to develop disciplinary literacy, applied understanding, opportunity to evaluate/reflect on observed relationships - good. Great to see a mix of teacher instruction, visual models (ppt) and scaffolded handouts to support learner progress.

To streamline and support activity pacing, I recommend you take opportunity to feedback to the whole class to report on intermittent progress and reaffirm benchmarks. With you moving around the room frequently, some group

Section D: Mentor Teacher Feedback and Discussion

A brief summary of your conversation with the mentor teacher(s).

Caught up with Lee briefly, with no major concerns - Haaris has intergrated well into the school and continues to contribute well within and beyond the class setting.

Section E: Student Teacher Discussion and Future Considerations

These can be posted to the Evaluative Visit 2 report as required

A summary of the conversation post-lesson with the student. This might include discussion about Professional Experience documentation and strengths demonstrated through the lesson.

We discussed Haaris' strengths and experience of practice observed in this lesson, while also looking at elements relating to student engagement and the new zealand context. Lesson began very strong, and Haaris might apply some small tweaks of practice to maintain that momentum.

Key development areas:
Up to three key areas shared here. These will be posted to the Evaluative Visit 2 Report as required.

As part of classroom practice, endeavor to improve use of student names, increasing student relationships. Overtime, the lack of uptake on student names will increase variance of behaviour, and sense of shared ownership/accountability in learning.

Some improvements in communication/layout of lesson plan to show clearer curriculum links, and clearer differentiation between the roles that teachers and learners fill across the learning sequence. Learning events register could provide better, more developed samples of lesson planning.

You might also use the whiteboard to record/track student ideas more to support wider understanding and retention of key ideas/learning. Take opportunities to reinforce benchmarks/progress to the whole class as part of your moving around the room during practical.

Section F: E-portfolio Checklist

Please ask the student to show evidence of:

- ☑ Sighted planning for observed lesson.
- ☑ Sighted e-portfolio.
- ☑ Mentor teacher is sighting lessons prior to student teacher teaching (as per mentor teacher instructions). Not applicable for LAT students.
- ☑ Mentor teacher providing feedback.
- ☑ Mentor teacher formally observing lessons (one per week once teaching OR full feedback in lesson plans). LAT students are being observed as well as observing other teachers as part of their "10+10" observations.
- ☑ Evidence of student teacher lesson plan evaluations and Learning Events Register begun. For LAT students, they can share unit planning examples and their daily planner.
